

Dear Commissioners of the FCC,

It has been several months since I wrote to you about the dangers of allowing media consolidation. At that time, Chairman Powell worked with the Bush administration to relax the FCC's in spite of overwhelming evidence that most Americans want to broaden the base of media control.

It is hard for me to understand who the people of the FCC are working for if not Americans. I know that the Bush administration is power hungry and corrupt, but does this extend to every nook and cranny of the FCC? Is no one there working on behalf of justice and right?

Please let me know that someone is looking out for the interests of Americans, not only by failing to make the media restrictions looser, but by tightening them and putting control of the airwaves back in local hands.

Thank you,
Charlotte Rogan, Dallas, Texas
